Black ice (also known as clear ice) forms when water freezes in such a way that it appears completely clear to the eye. The clarity of the ice frequently causes the pavement below to show through, creating the illusion that no ice is present. This poses a great deal of risk that pedestrians, bicyclists, and motorists may be unaware that there ...

Black Ice. By far, the most dangerous driving condition is driving on black ice, otherwise known as glare ice. You've probably heard one of these terms used before, but what exactly is this type of ice and why is it so dangerous? Simply put, black ice is a thin layer of frozen water which contains very few air bubbles.
