Black Visual Culture: Modernity and Postmodernity y Gen Doy London: I.B.Tauris y auris publishers, 2000.254 pp. The sub-title Modernity and Postmodernity to Gen Doy's Black Visual Culture is somewhat deceptive. Doy does gloss these two movements in relationship to the black visual arts in scene in Britain.

The recent explosion of interest in visual culture has often been premised on the assumption that distinct scopic regimes or visual practices are relative to the cultures out of which they emerge. Any naturalist hope of locating transcendental visual experience prior to its cultural coding is thus taken to be in vain.

Modernism placed European man at the center of culture. While images of the divine were the focus of art from Ancient Iraq through the time of the Renaissance, and absolutist monarchs like Louis XIV began to usurp the position of artistic dominance during the Baroque period, in modernity, the figure of man occupied the place of centrality.

Modernity, a topic in the humanities and social sciences, is both a historical period (the modern era), as well as the ensemble of particular socio-cultural norms, attitudes and practices that arose in the wake of the Renaissance—in the "Age of Reason" of 17th-century thought and the 18th-century "Enlightenment". Some commentators consider the era of modernity to have ended by 1930, with ...
