Chocolate is, for most of us, a guilty pleasure. We know we probably shouldn't but, hey, it's been a long day. Yet for thousands of children in the cocoa fields of West Africa, chocolate is a source not of pleasure but of hard, sometimes hazardous, work. The link between child labour and chocolate production is, lamentably, a long-standing one.

Blood contains inhibitors for certain bacteria such as Neisseria and Haemophilus genera and the blood agar must be heated to inactivate these inhibitors and to release essential growth factors (e.g., V factor) . Heating of blood agar converts it into chocolate agar (heated blood turns a chocolate color) and supports the growth of these bacteria.. Beta hemolysis in sheep blood agar.
